PHILIPPINE DAILY INQUIRER
OPINION

Bane

IF PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARROYO KNOWS what's good for her, her administration and the country, she should let the outspoken and abrasive Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez go. He has committed so many gaffes and gaucheries that he is no longer funny or amusing but has become one big embarrassment to the government and the nation.

EDITORIALS

As secretary of justice, Gonzalez has made many statements that, instead of advancing the cause of justice, have only resulted in injustice and have worked against the interest of his own people and nation. He is not even witty or suave or civilized in his pronouncements; he is tactless, boorish and crude.

Those who have been following the papers, listening to the radio and watching TV the past year should know by now that Gonzalez has been shooting his big mouth off on almost every big issue that crops up. It would have been good had he been a fount of wisdom and discernment, but he has only muddled the issues, worked against the national interest and made some statements that could be actionable.

Gonzalez showed his bias on the Subic Base rape case at the very start when he suggested that the victim "Nicole" only imagined the rape. He said that the charges against three of the four accused should have been downgraded but he decided to include them in the case "to appease the mob."

When Susan Roces, widow of opposition presidential candidate Fernando Poe Jr., called for Ms Arroyo's resignation, Gonzalez said that Roces was "a griping widow" whose husband was not fated to become president.

Gonzalez vented his ire on the University of the Philippines, alma mater of scholars, militants and activists, and said it has produced only "dissenters and naked runners," referring in the latter phrase to the fraternity men who have made a tradition of streaking once a year in protest against one thing or another.

He tried to discredit the findings of United Nations human rights rapporteur Philip Alston, saying that he was just a muchacho (servant) who had no right to meddle and investigate the extrajudicial killings in the Philippines.

Gonzalez reached the height of insensitivity and tactlessness when he said that Peace Corps volunteer Julia Campbell was "quite careless" and "a little irresponsible" and could have actually courted trouble when she walked alone on a mountain trail.

Accused of promising 18 Iloilo barangay chairmen P10,000 each if they could deliver a 12-0 victory for Team Unity, he denied that he had done anything wrong. As secretary of justice, he should have known that the Election Code considers a crime the act of giving, the act of offering and the act of promising money or anything of value to any person or any organization to induce them to vote for or against any candidate.

In his previous statements, Gonzalez may have only been boorish, tactless or crude. But his promise to give P10,000 to each of the 18 barangay chairmen may be used as the basis of a criminal case against him. The President would do well not to wait for a public outcry to build up against Gonzalez. He has to go, and the sooner he goes, the better.

Blessings

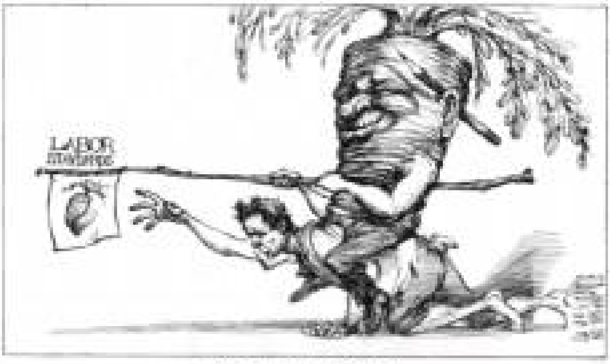

THANK GOD FOR SMALL, TENDER MERCIES during this troubled election period.

Thank God for the finding of the Social Weather Stations that there is such a thing as a conscience vote, and that it counts in an election.

Thank God for the resurgence of people power in Pampanga where thousands are giving of their time, effort and money to support the candidacy of a priest for governor. This will certainly give the voters a third option, and not just a choice between an alleged "jueteng queen" and a purported "quarry king."

Thank God for the many civic and non-government organizations like the (Vote.ph) team that are conducting voters' education programs, and for the organizations like Namfrel that are preparing to safeguard our votes and ensure that they are properly counted and reported.

God knows that our rotten political system needs a thorough overhaul. The small acts that these civic-spirited organizations are doing could be the starting point of a huge movement seeking a radical change in the political system.

Ida Henares: Call her Dr. Kapuso

The GMA 7 Artist Center head says a manager is also a counselor, therapist and mentor rolled into one

By Rupert San Diego Jr.

MY STAFF AND I SOMEtimes joke that we should hang a sign on the office door that says, 'The doctor is in,'" jokes Ida Henares, network assistant vice president and head of GMA Artist Center (GMAAC). "Maybe we should charge for counseling sessions with our artists."

She's kidding, of course, but in a lot of ways, she can be called Dr. Kapuso.

After four years at the GMAAC, she has learned that a manager also needs to be a counselor, therapist and mentor.

Often, Henares notes, she also assumes the role of disciplinarian to all 170 artists on her roster.

Last year, the Kapuso network [illegible] after it suspended two of its "StarStruck" discoveries, Jackie Rice and Ivan Mayo for almost a month.

Involving parents

"But more than employing such measures, we also talk to the kids' parents," Henares says. "We ask them to join us in thinking of solutions."

Sometimes, she points out, one can only go so far. "We don't want to deprive them of income." Being away from the limelight may bring their budding careers more harm than good, she adds.

"At one point," Henares recalls, "Ivan was getting discouraged. So we enrolled him in a program."

It was an Advanced Acting with Therapy and Personality Development Workshop, facilitated by Nanding Josef, vice president and artistic director of the Cultural Center of the Philippines.

"It really worked for Ivan," Henares says. "After going through Nanding's program, Ivan's attitude changed. Nanding has a background in psychotherapy."

She explains that the network takes a holistic approach to developing and empowering talents. Apart from speech and acting lessons, the network also conducts values formation seminars for its talents.

Instant fame

In the advent of reality TV, networks have to make sure that new stars are equipped with the necessary tools to handle instant fame, Henares says.

"Reality shows make my job easier because it's a great way to promote new talents. But it can be a challenge for the artist who will be deluged with [illegible] and assignments after winning the contest," she points out.

Making things a little more difficult, the network has to strike while the iron is hot. New stars don't have the luxury of time to attend workshops, she clarifies, because they may miss the window of opportunity that [illegible] offers.

"They have to go to work immediately. It's as if new stars are going through on-the-job training. While they're working,
